Eileen O'Connor Named to Washingtonian Magazine's List of Top Wealth Managers

McLean, VIRGINIA (January 11, 2009) – Eileen O'Connor has been recognized by Washingtonian Magazine in the January 2009 issue as one of the area's top financial experts. To compile the list of leading financial planners, wealth managers, accountants and estate planners, the publication surveyed hundreds of industry experts and asked them: "Whom would you trust with your own money?"

"To be recognized by industry peers as someone they would trust with their own wealth is a tremendous honor, one that reflects my professional commitment to helping clients achieve their personal and professional financial objectives," said O'Connor. "Rather than simply advising clients on investment, my approach has been to serve as a 'personal CFO' for high net worth investors, business owners and executives seeking expert management of the most complex and important financial aspects of their lives."

O'Connor's fee-based wealth management practice incorporates investment management, advanced planning, and managing relationships with other experts on behalf of her clients. O'Connor holds the CFP® professional designation, an MBA from Harvard Business School, a B.S. in Finance from the University of Virginia, and an Executive Certificate in Financial Planning from Georgetown University. O'Connor also has deep and diverse experience in financial and management consulting, working throughout her career on behalf of some of the largest financial services companies in the U.S., Europe and Asia.
